The temple and the city

Gangaikondacholapuram, now in the Udaiyarpalayam taluk of Tiruchi district, in Tamilnadu, was created as the capital of the Chōlas by Rājendra I, the son and successor of Rājarāja I, the great Chōla who conquered a large area in South India at the beginning of the 11th century A.D. It occupies an important place in the history of India. As the capital of the Chōlas from about 1025 A.D. for about 250 years, the city controlled the affairs of entire south India, from the Tungabhadra in the north to Ceylon in the south. The great temple of Siva at this place is next only to the great temple of Tanjore in its monumental nature and surpasses it in sculptural quality. The city was founded by the eminent Chōla emperor probably to commemorate his victorious march to the Ganges and reflected his personality throughout the days of its eminence and continues to do so because of its great temple, though its role as a capital of the south has been forgotten by its inhabitants. It is now a small village, bounded in the west by the celebrated Gangaikondān lake, one of the biggest lakes in south India, and by the river Vaḍavāru in the east. To the south and the north are fields with a few hamlets bearing names recalling their associations with the greatness of the city. A highway winding its way through this once great city runs north-south leading to the Lower Anicut, while another road cuts across the great lake east-west and connects this village with Jayamkondachōlapuram, another Chōla foundation about six miles to the west. The lofty tower of the great prāsāda could be seen from about a distance of six or seven miles. Besides the great temple and other ancient relics, inscriptions on the temple are our primary source of information for reconstructing the history of the city. Copper plate charters issued by Rājendra and his successors also give valuable information. A few Tamil literary works like the Thiruvīsaippā of Kāṇvūrdevar, the Kalingattup-paraṇi of Jayamkondār, the Mūvar Ulā of Ottakkuttar, and the Kōil Oḷugu furnish some data. The Sanskrit work, the Vikramāṅkadeva Charita of Bilhana on the exploits of Vikramāditya VI, also throws some light. Records dealing with the Udaiyarpalayam zamin give some valuable information about the temple and the city.

Rajendra the Builder

Gangaikonda Chōla Rājendra I, was the son of Rājarāja I through his queen, Vānavanmādēvi, also called Tribhuvanamādēvi, evidently a Chōra princess. Ārdra was the star of Rājendra's nativity.

Rājendra was a boy when Rājarāja ascended the throne in 985 A.D. Under the care and guidance of his father, he grew up as the most powerful general in Tamil history. When once twenty years old, he led a Chōla army into the heart of the Western Chālukya kingdom. He was then called Nārmaḍi Chōla Rājendra Vidyādhara and the ornament of the Chōla race. In this campaign Rājendra is said to have advanced as far north as Bijapur District with an army of 900,000 and as a result, territories upto Rattapāḍi were annexed to the Chōla empire. He is also identified with Pañcavan Mārāya, who served as the Mahādaṇḍanāyaka of the Vengi and Ganga countries.

Between March 27th and July 7th, 1012 A.D., Rājendra was chosen heir apparent by Rājarāja. Rājendra jointly ruled with his father for nearly four years till 1016 A.D., when Rājarāja passed away.

On the state of the empire at the time of Rājendra's accession, Prof. K. A. Nilakanta Sastri, the greatest authority on Chōla history, writes, "Rājendra inherited from his father an extensive empire comprising the whole of the modern Madras and Andhra and parts of Mysore and the island of Ceylon. The administration had been carefully organised and a fairly powerful bureaucracy brought into existence, which while it scrupulously respected the 'liberties' feudal and corporate, of the various magnates and associations that studded the land, successfully maintained the king's peace and enforced all civil rights. The army was a strong and tried body of men, well able to defend the wide land frontier and to keep down any threatened outbreaks in areas newly subjected to the empire and ready for aggressive warfare abroad. The hold on Ceylon and some other islands like the Maldivé islands was securely maintained by a powerful naval force which also served to protect the considerable overseas trade of the empire with the islands of the East Indies and with China. During the thirty-three years of his reign, Rājendra turned these initial advantages to the best possible use and succeeded in raising the Chōḷa empire to the position of the most extensive and most respected Hindu state of his time".

Rājendra fought many battles and won every one of them. For every victory he gained, he assumed a title commemorating his success. He also conferred titles on his victorious generals. The moment he assumed independent sovereignty, he embarked on a "conquest of the quarters", the digvijaya.

The western Chāḷukyas, were probably the first target of his attack. Rājendra conquered "Idaiturai-nāḍu, Banavāsi, encircled by a continuous hedge of forest, Kollipākkai whose ramparts were surrounded by sulli trees, and Mannaikkaḍakka whose fortifications were unapproachable, all in a single campaign, directed against Satyāśraya the Chāḷukya ruler. Idaiturai-nāḍu was the country between the rivers Krishna in the north and Tungabhadra in the south comprising a large part of the present Raichur District." Kollippākkai lies about 45 miles north-east of Hyderabad and is now called Kulpāk. Mannaikkaḍakkam is identified with Mānyakhēda (modern Malkhed). In this campaign, the Chōḷa emperor, crossed the Tungabhadra and attacked the capital of the Chāḷukyas. After completing his successful expedition in the north (north being considered an auspicious direction, expeditions were first taken in that direction for ensuring victories) Rājendra started on a southern campaign in which he defeated the Pāṇḍyas, the Kēraḷa ruler and finally the king of Ceylon. Of Rājendra's southern campaign the Thiruvālangāḍu copper charter gives the following account.

"This famous and heroic king, possessed of a powerful army, and bent upon the performance of meritorious deeds with heaps of money acquired by his own arm, then set his heart upon a digvijaya.

"Accordingly, after arranging for the protection of his own capital, the unrivalled king Uttama-Chōḷa, first started in the direction marked by Triśanku (the south) desirous of conquering the Pāṇḍya king.

"The commander daṇḍanātha of the ornament of the solar race thereupon struck the Pāṇḍya king who had a great force; and the Pāṇḍya abandoned his home in fright and fled for refuge to the Malaya mountain, the abode of Agastya.

"Rājarāja's son the master of policy, took possession of the bright spotless pearls, the seeds of the spotless fame of the Pāṇḍya kings.

"After establishing there his own son Sri Chōḷa Pāṇḍya for the protection of the Pāṇḍya country, the light of the solar race then proceeded to the conquest of the West.

"Having heard of the ignominy sustained by kings at the hands of Bhārgava in battle, this proud king, finding him on the face of the earth, developed a desire to conquer the lands created by him.

"Who else other than this supreme lord (Parameśvara) can entertain the thought in his mind of subjugating the ancient land protected by the glory of the ornament of the Bhṛgukula and free from the inroads of enemies?

"The fearless Madhurāntaka crossed the Sahya mountain and forthwith set upon the Kerala in great force and there ensued a fierce battle which brought ruins upon kings.

"After having conquered the Kerala kings and harrowed the land guarded by the austerities of the lord of the Bhṛigus, the prince returned to his capital, the abode of prosperity".

Both the Pāṇḍya and Kēraḷa countries were placed under the voiceroyalty of his son who was crowned at Madurai, with the title Jātavarman Sundara-Chōḷa Pāṇḍya. Rājendra is said to have built a palace at Madurai. The Chēra king, Rājasimha, built a temple to Lord Viṣṇu at Mannārkoil, naming it Rājendra Chōḷa Viṇṇagar after Rājendra.

Rājendra then invaded Ceylon. His father had defeated earlier Mahinda V and annexed a major part of Ceylon to the Chōḷa empire and named it Mummudi-Chōḷa Vaḷanāḍu with many subdivisions called Rājarāja Vaḷanāḍu, Vikrama-chōḷa-vaḷanāḍu etc. Rājendra's expedition was thorough and complete. His Karandai plates record that "Rājendra conquered the king of Ceylon with a fierce army and seized his territory, his queen, and her crown, his daughter, all his wealth, his transport, and the spotless garland of Indra, and crown of the Pāṇḍya left in his charge; after having lost the battle and being shorn of his queen, son and other belongings, the king of Ceylon, out of fear, came and sought the two feet of Rājendra as shelter".

The Ceylonese chronicle, Mahāvamśa confirms this account and states that with Pulattinagara as base the Chōlas held sway over Rājaraṭṭa as far as the locality known as Rakḥhapāsānakaṇṭa .... king Mahinda dwelt twelve years in the Chōla land and entered into heaven in the forty-eighth year (from his ascent of the throne)".

Probably Rājendra personally headed his army and brought the entire island of Ceylon under Chōla rule. Towards the end of his reign however, there was an uprising in south Ceylon which was dealt with by his able son, Rājādhirāja I.

Rājendra next sent his celebrated expedition to the Gangetic plain to bring holy waters to purify his own land, after inflicting crushing defeats on all enemy forces upto Bengal. His Thiruvālaṅkāḍu copper charter states that "the light of the solar race (Rājendra), mocking Bhagīratha who by the force of his austerities caused the descent of the Ganga, set out to sanctify his own land with the waters of that stream brought by the strength of his arm.

"He seized Sakkarakōṭṭam, whose warriors were brave; Madura-maṇḍalam destroyed in a trice, the prosperous city of Nāmanaikkōnam with its dense groves, Pañcapaḷḷi whose warriors bore cruel bows, Māsumi-deśa with its green fields, a large heap of family treasures together with many other treasures which he carried away after capturing the Indraratha of the ancient race of the moon together with his family in a fight which took place at Ādinagar; a city whose great fame knew no decline, Oḍḍavisaya which was difficult of approach on account of its dense forest defence; the good Kōsalaināḍu, where Brahmins assembled; Taṇḍabhutti, in whose gardens bees abounded, after having destroyed Dhammapāla in a hot battle; Takkanalāḍam whose fame reached all directions and which he occupied after forcefully attacking Raṇasūra; Vangāladēśa where the rain water never stopped and from which Govindaachandra fled, having descended from his male elephant; elephants of rare strength, women and treasure which he seized after having been pleased to put to flight in a hot battlefield the strong Mahīpāla by the sound of a conch from the deep sea; Uttaraḷāḍam on the shores of the expansive ocean producing pearls and the Ganga whose waters bearing fragrant flowers dashed against the bathing places".

Rājendra's father had integrated the Eastern Chāḷukya kingdom of Vengi politically and dynastically with the Chōla line. As a result of Rājendra's expedition all the countries north of Vengi, which included Kalinga, Odḍa, Southern Kōsala, the lower and upper Lāḍa and finally the Vangāladēśa (Bengal) were made to bow before the might of this Chōḷa emperor. Rājendra himself went upto the banks of the Gōḍāvāri, where he awaited the return of his triumphant army, which brought Ganges water in golden vessels, carried on the heads of the vanquished rulers.

Almost a thousand years before Rājendra, a Chēra king of the Sangam age, Senguttuvan had marched upto the Himalayas with an army to bring a stone to carve an image of Goddess Pattini, which he enshrined in a temple erected for the purpose. Two northern kings are said to have opposed Senguttuvan's march, but they were vanquished in a trice and made to carry the stone on their head. This account is recorded in the Silappadhikāram. Some critics doubt its authenticity. But Rājendra's expedition was an important landmark. According to R.D. Banerjee, "the invasion of the great southern conqueror, Rājendra Chōḷa I, seems to have left a permanent mark in Bengal. Some obscure Karnāṭa chief seems to have followed Rājendra and settled in West Bengal. From him was descended Sāmantasena, who is generally taken to be the founder of the Sena dynasty". To commemorate this celebrated victory, Rājendra assumed the title of Gangaikondā Chōḷa, a name given not only to his new capital (Gangaikondachōḷapuram) but also to his temple.

The conquest of the overseas island of Sumatra and the Malay Peninsula forms the most important event in the life of Rājendra and perhaps in the annals of South Indian history. This triumphant naval expedition was directed against the ruler of Srīvijaya who also held sway over Kaḍāram.

Rājarāja had cordial relations with Srīmāra Vijayōttuṅgarman, the ruler of Srīvijaya who visited the Chōḷa country and erected a Buddhist vihāra in the name of his father for which Rājarāja gifted lands and money. After his father's death Rājendra confirmed the grant to this Vihāra. But the relationship became strained subsequently. Either the flourishing overseas trade of Chōḷas was obstructed or Rājendra having conquered the countries in the north, west, and south wished to conquer the east, to complete his digvijaya. The Nicobar islands, the upper and lower Sumatran islands known as Ilāmūrīdesa, Srīvijaya, Singapore, the Malay peninsula and the lower part of Burma were subjugated. A number of places where he fought are detailed in Rājendra's Tamil inscriptions.

‘Rājendra having despatched many ships in the midst of the rolling sea and having caught Sangrāma Vijayōttunga Varman, the king of Kaṭāram, together with the elephants in his glorious army, took the large heap of treasures which that king had rightfully accumulated, captured with noise, the arch called Vidyādhara tōraṇa at the war-gate of his extensive city. Srivijaya with the jewelled wicked gate adorned with great splendour and the gate of large jewels; Pannai with water in its bathing ghats; the ancient Malaiyūr with the strong mountain for its rampart; Māyirūṅgam surrounded by the deep sea as by a moat; Ilangāsōka (Lankāsoka) undaunted in fierce battles; Māppālam having abundant deep water as defence; Māvelīmbangam having fine walls as defence; Valaippandūru having Valaippandūru; Talāittakkolam praised by great men (versed in) the sciences; Mādamālingam, firm in great and fierce battles; Ilāmuriḍēṣam whose fierce strength rose in war; Mānakkavāram in whose extensive flower gardens honey was collecting; and Kaṭāram of fierce strength which was protected by the deep sea’.

For a detailed account of Rājendra's conquest of Kaṭāram and the identification of the various battlefields of the campaign, the reader may refer to Prof. K. A. Nilakanta Sastri's 'The Chōlas'. To commemorate his signal victories Rājendra assumed the title of Kaṭāramkoṇḍachōḷa. Rājendra thus completed a brilliant digvijaya ‘conquest of quarters’, which made him a Chakravarti.

‘The closing years of Rājendra's reign formed the most splendid period of the history of the Chōlas of the Vijayālaya line. The extent of the empire was at its widest and its military and naval prestige stood at its highest. There remained the necessity ever present in military empires of carrying out punitive expeditions to suppress outbreaks and keep the conquered territories under control. The emperor was ably assisted by his talented sons and other members of his family and the tasks of imperial administration were thus put in commission’.

Rājendra had many titles like Madhurāntaka, Uttamachōḷa, Virachōḷa, Muḍikoṇḍachōḷa, Paṇḍitachōḷa, Gangaikoṇḍachōḷa, Gaṅgaiyum Pūrvadēṣamum Kadāramum koṇḍa Ayyan. He had many queens of whom Vānavanmādēvi, Mukkōkiḷān, Paṇcavanmādēvi and Viramādēvi deserve mention. The last mentioned entered the funeral pyre with her husband at his death.

III

Later history

The first Chōḷa king to be crowned at Gaṅgaikonda-chōḷapuram was Rājakesari Rājādhirāja I, the eldest son of Rājendra I. He had been installed as crown prince very early in Rājendra's reign (1018 A.D.) and till his death in 1054, he led a life of warfare. He is probably identical with Sundara Chōḷa Pāṇḍya, who was installed as the viceroy of the Pāṇḍya country in his father's reign. He quelled a rebellion in Ceylon, conquered a Pāṇḍya who fomented trouble, and dealt severely with the ruler of Vāṇād. In the north he led three expeditions against the Chāḷukyas, ransacked Kalyānapura, their capital, and captured Kollāpura. To commemorate this victory he assumed the title, Kalyānapuramum, Kollāpuramum koṇḍa Vijayarājendra. A few sculptures of exceptional beauty were brought by him as war trophies from Kalyānapura. One of the sculptures bears an inscription recording the fact that it was brought by Vijayarājendra from Kalyānapura after its conquest. Evidently, the sculptures of Durga, Ganesa, and the solar pīṭha now in Gaṅgaikonda-chōḷapuram, was also brought home. Rājādhirāja performed the asva-medha, to celebrate his signal victories. In 1054, at an advanced age, he led his army against the Chāḷukyas and fought a battle at Koppam, on the banks of the Tungabhadra. Rājādhirāja was mortally wounded while seated on his elephant. The Chōḷa army fell into disarray and began to retreat in great confusion. The Chāḷukya army pressed forward with great force. Rājādhirāja's younger brother, Rājendra II, who was stationed behind, marched forward at great risk. The Chōḷa army regrouped itself and followed its master. Rājendra was wounded in the thigh and lost some of his close associates. Nothing daunted, Rājendra moved forward, killing many able Chāḷukya generals. The Chāḷukya army was shattered. Sōmēśvara, the Chāḷukya king, fled. Many able Chāḷukya warriors lost their life or were taken prisoners. Thus Rājendra converted an almost imminent defeat into a brilliant success. As if to commemorate this brilliant success, Rājendra crowned himself king on the battlefield, while his wounds were still fresh on his body. Thus the second son of Rājendra I was crowned not at Gaṅgaikonda-chōḷapuram, his capital, but on the battlefield. Rājādhirāja came to be called 'the elder brother who lost his life on an elephant'.

Rājendra II was succeeded by his younger brother Virarājendra, who also won victories over the Chālukya after winning a decisive battle against the Kalyāṇi Chālukya, Vikramāditya. Virarājendra gave his daughter in marriage to him. The earliest epigraph found on the temple belongs to the reign of Virarājendra. The epigraph records the issue of orders by Virarājendra confirming the gifts made by his father Rājendra I, and elder brother Rājādhirāja I.

After Virarājendra passed away, his son Adhirājendra ascended the throne. He was quite friendly with his brother-in-law. Adhirājendra was a weak ruler, while Vikramāditya was shrewd and able. The trained and seasoned Chōḷa generals saw a danger to the Chōḷa empire in this alliance. They refused to accept Adhirājendra. The Chōḷas always chose not the eldest son, but the ablest as their successors. The Chōḷa generals were guided by this principle. But Vikramāditya came to the rescue of Adhirājendra. Marching on Kāñchi, he punished those who rebelled there and reaching Gangaikondachōḷapuram, crowned his brother-in-law as Chōḷa king. He stayed there for two months to make the position of Adhirājendra secure and then returned to his capital. As soon as Vikramāditya left Gangaikondachōḷapuram, the Chōḷa generals rebelled and in the uprising Adhirājendra lost his life.

Ammaṅgādēvi, a daughter of Rājendra I was married to the Eastern Chālukya ruler, Rājarāja Narendra. Their son was named Rājendra, the future Kulōttuṅga. From Kaliagattupparapi, a heroic poem composed on him by Jayamkondār, it is learnt that Kulōttuṅga was born and brought up in Gangaikondachōḷapuram. He had his education, military and other training and was crowned Yuvarāja by Virarājendra at Gangaikondachōḷapuram. At the time of the uprising, at Gangaikondachōḷapuram Kulōttuṅga was waging a war in the north. He at once rushed to Gangaikondachōḷapuram. The Chōḷa generals found in him a capable ruler, crowned him Chōḷa emperor in the name of Kulōttuṅga. He immediately restored peace in the kingdom. A fragmentary inscription mentioning his mother Ammaṅgādēvi is preserved in the Gangaikondachōḷapuram temple. One of his inscriptions is also found in the temple. It refers to a gift of land to some other temple. An inscription dated in his 41st regnal year, in the temple gives the prasasti of a Gāhaḍavāla king of Kanauj. The inscription does not give the name of the ruler or the nature of gift, as it is left unfinished. But according to K. A. N. Sastri it should be assigned to either Madanapāla or his son, Gōvindachandra of Kanauj. It points to some dynastic connection between the Gāhadavālas and the imperial Chōlas. The Kalingattupparani a contemporary poem on Kulōttuṅga refers to Gangaikōṇḍachōlapuram as Gangāpuri. Gangaikōṇḍachōlapuram continued to be the capital of the successors of Kulōttuṅga. Thus Vikrama Chōla, Kulōttuṅga II, Rājarāja II, Rājādhirāja II and Kulōttuṅga III retained it as their capital. There are a few fragmentary records of Kulōttuṅga III in the temple.

Kulōttuṅga III was the last of the great Chōla emperors. He won signal victories against Ceylon, Madurai, and Karuvūr (the Chēras) and assumed the title of Conqueror of Madurai, Karuvūr and Īlam. However, towards the close of his reign, the dynamic Mājavarma Sundara Pāṇḍya humiliated him. He invaded the Chōla country and razed Tanjore and Uṇḍai to the ground and performed the Virābhishēka at Āyirattali and reached as far as Chidambaram. It is not known whether Sundara Pāṇḍya captured Gangaikōṇḍachōlapuram. At any rate, it is not mentioned in his inscriptions. The humiliation marked the beginning of the decline and fall of the Chōla empire and with it of the Chōla capital.

Kulōttuṅga III did not live long after this defeat and was succeeded by an inefficient son Rājarāja III. The latter was driven out of his capital by the Pāṇḍya and tried to escape to the north to join the Kuntalas, (the Hōysalas of Mysore) but was intercepted by the Pallava chieftain, Kōpperuṇṅiṅga probably at Tellāru where Rājarāja was made a captive. Hōysala Narasiṅha successfully intervened and defeated the Pāṇḍya in the south. Hōysala generals captured Kōpperuṇṅiṅga's territory and released the Chōla. Rājarāja III was recrowned at Gangaikōṇḍachōlapuram. It is not known whether the city suffered on account of these wars. However the contemporary works speak of Muḍikōṇḍachōlapuram as the Chōla capital. Probably Rājarāja III had a preference for that place though Gangaikōṇḍachōlapuram continued to be of importance.

Jaṭavarman Sundara, who ascended the Pāṇḍya throne in 1251, conquered territories upto Nellore and kept the Chōlas under subjection. Probably the Chōla was paying tribute to him. One of Sundara's inscriptions is found in the Gangaikōṇḍachōlapuram temple dated in his second regnal year. Evidently, he captured the city in his very first regnal year. Sundara established a special worship named after him in the temple. Vikrama, who shared the Pāṇḍya throne with him, has left an inscription in the temple.

Sundara was succeeded by Māṇavarman Kulaśēkhara, another able ruler in 1268 A.D. He defeated and probably killed the last Chōḷa Rājendra III, in Kaṇṇanūr in 1279. Gangaikōṇḍachōḷapuram was included in his dominion and two inscriptions of him are found in the temple. After the death of Kulaśēkhara, in 1310 the Tamil country was invaded by Malik Kafur, a Muslim general and there was anarchy and confusion for a year. The Pāṇḍya hold on Gangaikōṇḍachōḷapuram seems to have been weakened though they continued to hold sway in a nominal way over this part of the country.

In 1365, Kumāra Kampaṇa, the Vijayanagara viceroy marched as far as Rāmēśvaram and brought the southern country under his control. There are no records of any of the Vijayanagara rulers till 1463, nearly a hundred years after Kampaṇa's conquest. There is a record of Thiruvēṇḡadamuḍaiyān Ekāmrānātha Gāṅḡyan dated 1463, who probably was a subordinate of the Vijayanagara ruler Mallikārjuna. An inscription of Prandha Virūpāksha, the son of Mallikārjuna dated in 1483, is in the temple. This proves that Gangaikōṇḍachōḷapuram was in the Vijayanagara empire. An inscription of Krishṇadēva, in Tirthanagari (South Arcot) dated in 1517, records that the king gifted tax-free lands to many Siva and Vishṇu temples in the Chōḷamaṇḍalam. Gangaikōṇḍachōḷapuram temple is amongst them.

In the early part of 16th century Gangaikōṇḍachōḷapuram was brought under the Uḍaiyārpāḷaiyam subdivision which became the seat of Arasukāvalar, also called poligar. They were local chieftains who acted as the subordinates of the Vijayanagar emperors. They were to keep in perpetual readiness certain number of elephants, cavalry and foot soldiers to march against any army when called upon. For this purpose they were allotted certain revenue from a number of villages, assigned to them. Gangaikōṇḍachōḷapuram thus became a part of Uḍaiyārpāḷaiyam subdivision.

After the fall of the Vijayanagar empire, the poligar of Uḍaiyārpāḷaiyam continued to hold an important position in the area. In 1756 the French invaded Uḍaiyārpāḷaiyam and forced the Poligar to pay a tribute of 40,000 Rupees. In 1765, the Nawab assisted by a party of English attacked the forts of Uḍaiyārpāḷaiyam. During these battles, Gangaikondachōlapuram temple was probably used as a fort and considerably suffered damage. The bastions now found outside the enclosure walls in the west were probably erected during these wars. The district of Thiruchirappalli was handed over to the British East India Company in 1801 when the poligar of Udaiyārpālaiyam was paid an allowance of Rs. 1000. The estate was brought under the management of an agent of the Nawab. In 1817 the British Government restored a portion of the Polliam to the Poligar subject to a nominal Peshkist and gave him a zamindari sunnad. However Gangaikondachōlapuram was excluded from it.

The greatest damage to the temple was done in 1836, when a dam was erected across the Collidam about seven miles from the temple. For the supply of stones of the construction, some vandal members of the public works department pulled down the enclosure walls, the dilapidated gopura, the front and great maṇḍapa and carried away the stones.

An interesting account published in a local publication of 1855 and reproduced in the Indian Antiquary IV, page 274, states that 'speaking of the noble temple of Gangaikondachōlapuram it must not be omitted that when the lower Kolerun anikat was built, the structure was dismantled of a large part of the splendid granite sculptures which adorned it and the enclosing wall was almost wholly destroyed in order to obtain materials for the work. The poor people did their utmost to prevent this destruction and spoliation of a venerated edifice by the servants of a government that could show no title to it; but of course without success; they were only punished for contempt. A promise was made indeed that a wall of brick should be built in place of the stone wall that was pulled down; but unhappily it must be recorded that this promise has never been redeemed.'

The city then and now

There is an interesting reference in the Silappadhikāram, a post Saṅgam classic, to the foundation of Uṛaiyūr as a capital of the Chōḷas of the Saṅgam age. A cock is said to have attacked and chased away an elephant at Uṛaiyūr. This inspired the Chōḷa king to make Uṛaiyūr his Metropolis, for he believed that the inhabitants of that place would be heroic and valorous as the cock. A similar story of a rabbit chasing away a hound is told of the foundation of Pāñchālamkurichi, the capital of Vīrapāṇḍiya Kattabomman, who defied the British in late 18th century A. D.

If these traditions are of any value, they indicate that a place which inspired a ruler to attain phenomenal success, was honoured by being made capital of the ruler, who cherished sentimental attachment to it. Only thus can we explain for the foundation of Gangaikondachōḷapuram, the capital of the imperial Chōḷas from the eleventh century. Gangaikondachōḷapuram was unheard of even as a village when Rājendra I came to the Chōḷa throne. Tañjāvūr had been the Chōḷa capital ever since it had been captured from the Muttaraiya Chieftains by Vijayālaya, who founded the imperial line of the Chōḷas in the middle of ninth century A. D.

Tañjāvūr served the interests of the Chōḷas well. It was well fortified and adorned with palaces and mansions; it was there that Rājarāja I had built the great temple; it was from there that he had brought for the first time the entire southern India under one parasol. Yet within few years of the erection of the great temple and within few years of his passing, his son, Rājendra shifted his capital to Gangaikondachōḷapuram.

Was this because Gangaikondachōḷapuram served strategic purposes better than Tañjāvūr (but Tañjāvūr had better claims with its fortifications and natural river barriers)? No answer is possible except for a suggestion that it was probably here that Rājendra resolved to despatch a military expedition to the Gangetic plain.

The city of Gangaikondachōlapuram was probably founded by Rājendra before his 17th regnal year as it is mentioned in one of his inscriptions of that year. Judging from the available literature and the remains we may conclude that it was an extensive city, carefully planned and laid in accordance with the architectural treatises to suit the needs of a capital, rājadhāni. The city seems to have had two fortifications, one inner and the other outer. The outer was probably wider. The villagers point to a mound running all around the palace as the outer fortification. Systematic brick robbing has been going on in this place. It is probable that the outer fortification built of burnt bricks, was about six to eight feet wide. It consisted of two walls, the intervening space (the core) being filled with sand. The bricks are fairly large in size and are made of well burnt clay. A fortification at this place called Rājendra Chōla Madil (the fort wall named Rājendra Chōla) evidently after the builder, is mentioned in an inscription. This fortification might be identical with this outer wall. The inner fortification was around the royal palace, probably identical with the Uṭṭadai cāttu madil of the inscriptions.

The royal palace also was built of burnt brick. The ceilings were covered with flat tiles of small size, laid in a number of courses, in fine lime mortar. The pillars were probably made of polished wood, supported on granite bases; a few pillar bases have survived to this day. Iron nails and clamps have been recovered from this palace site.

In the reign of Virarājendra, Rājendra's third son, the palace at Gangaikondachōlapuram is referred to as Chōla-Keralan Thirumāligai (Chōla Keralan palace) evidently after one of the titles of Rājendra I. The same inscription mentions a few parts of the palace as ādibhūmi (the ground floor), Kālaisōpana (the eastern portico), and a seat named Māvali vānādhirājan. Evidently the palace was multistoried. In an inscription dated in the 49th year of Kulōttuṅga (1119 A.D.) reference is made to Gangaikondachōlamāligai at this place. It is likely that there were more than one royal building each having its own name.

Besides the names of the palace and fort walls, the names of a few roads and streets are preserved in the epigraphs. Two entryways named Thiruvāsal, the eastern gate and the Vēmbuguḍi gate, evidently the south gate leading to the village Vēmbuguḍi situated in that direction are mentioned. Reference is also found to highways named after Rājarāja and Rājendra as Rājarājan Peruvāḷi and Rājendran Peruvāḷi.

Other streets mentioned in epigraphs are the ten streets (Puttu teru), the gateway lane (Thiruvāsal Nārāsam) and the Suddhamali lane.

Probably in the reign of Kulōttuṅga, the fortifications were renewed and the city underwent some alterations and additions. An epigraph refers to the fort wall of Kulōttuṅga Chōḷa (Kulōttuṅga Chōḷan Thirumadiḷ). The inscription also refers to the highways, Kulōttuṅgachōḷan Thirumadiḷ peruvaḷi, Vilāṅguḍaiyaṅ Peruvaḷi and Kūḷaiyānai pōna Peruvaḷi (the highway through which a short elephant passed by). The strengthening of the fortification and additions to the city in the reign of Kulōttuṅga I were probably necessitated by the uprising which led to the murder of Chōḷa king Adirājendra, Kulōttuṅga's predecessor.

The epigraphs also refer to the Madhurāntaka Vaḍavāru, now called the Vaḍavāru, running about three miles east of the ruined capital. Madhurāntaka Vaḍavāru evidently named after one of the titles of Rājendra I, was a source of irrigation to a vast stretch of land bordering the capital. An irrigation channel called Ānaveṭṭuvān (destroyer of elephants) Kāl is also mentioned.

There were both wet and dry lands inside the Fort, used for cultivation and other purposes. The present positions of the existing temples throw some light on the lay out of the city. With the palace as the centre to the city, the great temple, and the other temples in the city seem to have been erected. Towards the north-east (Īsānya) of the palace is the great temple of Śiva. The Śiva temple according to Vāstu and Āgamic texts should be in the north-east of the city or village and should face east. Till recent times, the local people say an image of Viṣṇu with his consorts was in situ to the west of the palace. The temple of Viṣṇu should be in the west. To the south-east of the palace is a temple dedicated to Aiyanār (Śaṣṭa). Obviously there should have existed other temples as prescribed in traditional treatises.

A few villages lying mostly to the east of the temple bear names that recall their association with the original layout of the city. Thus Virachōḷapuram, Kollāpuram, Meykāvalputhūr, Vānavanallūr, Virabhōgha etc., are of interest.

A number of small tanks and ponds mentioned in inscriptions and retained in tradition, supplied drinking water to the residents, besides a number of wells. Most of the Chōla kings who succeeded Rājendra were crowned here. They retained it as their capital, reoriented and trained the efficient Chōla army. This capital of the most powerful empire in Asia at one time is now absolutely desolate only the temple of Gangaikondachōla survives. To those who know of the brilliant history of the Chōla empire it is a tragedy.

What caused the destruction of this city? The Pāndyas who put an end to the Chōla empire late in the 13th century, avenging their earlier defeats at the hands of the Chōlas, should have razed the city to the ground, a misfortune that befell on capitals in early times. It should have remained a heap of brick debris, the inhabitants of the nearby villages pilfering the bricks for their constructions. The people have also dug systematically deep into the ground and extracted cartloads of ancient bricks, at four annas per cartload. The residents boast that within a radius of five miles, no brick kiln is needed.

The temple

(A) Architecture

The temple of Gangaikondachōḷīśvara is approached through the northern entrance from the road. The passage passes through the enclosure wall and leads on to the inner court. As one steps in, the great Vimāna arrests the visitor's sight. The Vimāna with its recessed corners and upward movement presents a striking contrast to the straight-sided pyramidal tower of Tañjāvūr. As it rises to a height of 160 feet and is shorter than the Tañjāvūr tower, it is often described as the feminine counterpart of the Tañjāvūr temple. The Vimāna is flanked on either side by small temples; the one in the north now housing the Goddess is fairly well preserved. The small shrine of Chaṇḍikēśvara is near the steps in the north. In the north-east are a shrine housing Durga, a well called lion-well (śimhakeṇi) with a lion figure guarding its steps and a late mandapa housing the office. Nandi is in the east facing the main shrine. In the same direction is the ruined gōpura, the entrance tower. The main tower surrounded by little shrines truly presents the appearance of a great Chakravartī (emperor) surrounded by chieftains and vassals. The Gangaikondachōḷapuram Vimāna is undoubtedly a dēvalaya chakravartī, an emperor among temples of South India.

The enclosure

Though the temple of Gangaikondachōḷapuram follows the plan of the great temple of Tañjāvūr in most details it has an individuality of its own. From the remains it may be seen that it had only one enclosure wall and a gōpura while the Tañjāvūr temple has two gōpuras and enclosures. The prākāra follows the Tañjāvūr lay-out in that it had a two storeyed cloister running all around. Only a part of this has survived in the north. The stones from the other portions were utilised to build the Lower Anaicut across the Kollidam. The pillars of cut stone are severely plain throughout as in Tañjāvūr. They have no inscription unlike at Tañjāvūr. The courtyard is 566'9" in length and 318'6" width and has a transept at the west in line with the main sanctum. The cloister has a raised platform, 18' in height. At regular intervals, bases for shrines are noticed.

These shrines should have resembled the prākāra shrines of Tañjāvūr and in all probability housed the images of the eight directional deities, in their appropriate quarters as in Tañjāvūr. However none of the images have survived. Evidently the prākāra has been laid out in the traditional Vāstu grid system called Vāstupadavinyāsa.

The Gōpura

The entrance tower, the superstructure of which has completely fallen down, is located in the east. It measures about 68' x 46' with a 12' entry way. It followed in pattern the outer gōpura of the Tañjāvūr temple, with no sculptures on its base except for the Dvārapālas. The stones from the ruined gōpura were removed to construct the dam mentioned earlier. In the temples of Tañjāvūr, Dārāsūram and Tribhuvanam, there are two gōpuras, the outer being taller than the inner. But in Gangaikondachōlapuram there is only one gōpura, at the east. Besides this eastern entrance an entrance is provided in the northern enclosure, which now serves as the main entry on account of its proximity to the main road.

Dr. James C. Harle in his excellent work the 'Temple gateways in South India' states that "the gōpura of the great temple at Gangaikondachōlapuram (A.D. 1030) belongs as far as one can tell in its present ruined state to the same early phase of development as the Tañjāvūr gōpuras. It was neither as large or as complex, however, as the Tañjāvūr gōpuras. On plan, the whole edifice forms a rectangle approximately 60 feet by 33 feet. Large dvārapālas were placed on the outer facade. One of them now lies on the ground in front of the gōpura and measures at least seven feet. The unique dvāra, as at Tañjāvūr, is on the outside of the entryway. The vestibules have two storeys, divided by a crude and massive architrave; in the lower, an exposed stair is built against the back wall; above a doorway in the same wall may have led either to another stairway or to a circumambulatory corridor."

A fairly large size bull is found on a pedestal inside the court, facing the main sanctum. It is made up of fallen stones and stucco. It is not known whether the original one was monolithic. A bali pīṭha is found east of Nandi.

The building to the north of Nandī, called Alankāra maṇḍapa, and now housing the executive office of the temple was in all probability constructed in the 19th century.

The Simhakēni

To the north of this maṇḍapa is a circular well with steps provided at the western end. The entrance of the steps is adorned with a lion figure which has given the name to the well. According to tradition Rājendra poured a part of the Ganges water, brought from his famous expedition, into the well, to sanctify it. An inscription on the lion sculpture, in 19th century characters, records that it was constructed by the Zamindar of Uḍaiyārpālaiyam.

The Mahishāsūramardini Shrine

To the west of the lion-well is a shrine dedicated to the Goddess, Mahishāsūramardini. The shrine is a later structure (probably built in 14-15th Century) and did not form part of the original layout. It consists of a sanctum preceded by a maṇḍapa. The Goddess installed in the sanctum is similar to a Durga found at Veerareddi street, in the same village and is in all likelihood, Chālukyan in origin.

The Southern Kailāsa

The shrine, south of the main Vimāna and called the southern Kailāsa has a sanctum preceded by a maṇḍapa which in turn is fronted by flights of steps from south and north of which the basement alone remains. The outer walls of the sanctum and the front maṇḍapa carry niches, housing images. The niches of the sanctum carry Dakṣiṇāmūrti in the south and Līṅgodbhava in the west, while the niche on the north is empty. The niches on the front maṇḍapa carry in the south Gaṇeśa, Naṭarāja, Bhikṣhāṭaṇa, and Subrahmaṇya and in the north, Gauriprasāda, Durga, Ardhanārī and Bhīrava. The inner sanctum of the shrine is now in ruins.

A little to the north-east of this temple is a granite basement, probably the ruin of a maṇḍapa. It is now called the Alankāra maṇḍapa. To the west of this is a well, probably coeval with the temple.

To the south-west of the main temple, is a small shrine dedicated to Gaṇeśa. It has a sanctum preceded by a maṇḍapa. The structure could be assigned to the 13th century on stylistic grounds.

The temple of Goddess (Northern Kailāsa)

To the north of the main temple is a small shrine now housing the Goddess, Brhannāyaki, the consort of Lord Gangaikondaḥṣṭhāvara. The temple, as mentioned earlier, resembles the southern Kailāsa in every aspect and is called Uttara Kailāsa. It has a sanctum, preceded by a front mandapa, provided with side-steps. In front of this is a bigger mandapa (mahāmandapa), which is well preserved, unlike its southern counterpart. The niches on the sanctum and the front mandapa carry the same sculptures as in the southern Kailāsa. Thus Gaṇeśa, Natarāja, Bhikṣhātāṇa, Subrahmanya, Dakṣiṇāmūrti, Lingodbhava, Brahma, Bhairava, Ardhanārī, Durga, and Gaurīprasāda are noticed in order, from the south, while in the southern Kailāsa, the northern niche of the garbhagrha is empty, a sculpture of bearded Brahma is noticed in this temple. Two gatekeepers flank the entrance. In front of the gatekeepers, in the mahāmandapa, are images of Saraswati in the north and Gajalakshmi in the south. These two Goddesses, Lakshmi and Saraswati, occupy the same position in the main temple and also in the great temple of Tañjāvūr. They occupy these positions to suit some ritual needs. It is significant that the mahāmandapa has steps to it only on the side. In ancient times, steps were always provided on the sides and not in front of the sanctum. The beautiful image of Goddess now enshrined in the sanctum of this temple should be a later instalation. Originally the temple should have enshrined a Śiva Linga, like the southern Kailāsa. Though separate shrines for Goddesses came to be built in the main temples only from the reign of Rājendra I, no Devi-shrine was built originally in this temple, the present one being clearly a later institution.

The Chandikeśvara shrine

The little temple to the north-east of the central shrine enshrining Chandikeśvara, the steward of Śiva temple is of interest. It is an all stone temple built on a raised basement, with a storeyed superstructure. The sanctum is approached by side steps. Inside the sanctum is an image of Chandikeśvara, coeval with the temple. The outer walls of this sanctum have niches on all the three sides, carrying sculptures of Chandikeśvara. He is the principal subsidiary deity in Śiva temples and till about 13th century A.D. all transactions relating to the temple were made in his name. Hence a separate shrine is provided for him in the temple complex. This shrine is coeval in time with the main temple.

The main temple

The main temple consists of a sanctum tower called Srī Vimāna or Srī kōṭi, a big rectangular maṇḍapa called the mahāmaṇḍapa with an intervening vestibule called mukhamāṇḍapa.

The Srī Vimāna consists of the following parts beginning with the lowest basement.

1. The basement (upa-pīṭha)
2. The base (adhishṭāna)
3. The wall (bhitti)
4. The roof cornice (prastara)
5. The garland of miniature shrines (hāra)
6. The storeys (tala or bhūmi)
7. The neck (grīva)
8. The crown (sikhara) and
9. The finial (stūpi).

According to architectural treatises, basements (upa-pīṭhas) are introduced in temples to increase the height of the main tower; to add to structural stability and to make the temple tower majestic. That these purposes are magnificently fulfilled by the basements of both the Tañjāvūr temple and Gangaikondachōlapuram temple, may be noticed even by a casual visitor not conversant with architectural principles. Besides the purposes mentioned above, the basement also provides, a space to walk around the tower. In this temple, the basement is ornamented with sculptures of lions and leogriffs with lifted paws.

The main base adhishṭāna is decorated with well defined courses, consisting of the lotus moulding adaśpadma, and the kumuda moulding, topped by a frieze of leogriffs and riders. This constitute the main base, the top of which forms the flooring level of the inner sanctum.

That portion of the structure rising above the main base up to the roof cornice is called 'the wall' (bhitti or kāl). It is the principal element that encases the main sanctum and carries on it a number of niches housing various deities. The wall in this temple is divided into two horizontal courses by an intervening cornice. The lower and upper courses have an equal number of niches, on all the three sides except the front.

On the vertical axis the wall surfaces are well defined by intervening recesses forming a rectangle in the centre and squares at the corners. Each is made up of a central niche housing a deity, flanked by a group of small sculptures which in turn are flanked by pilasters simulating pillars. Thus each niche housing a deity appears as a miniature shrine. The recessed walls in the lower courses carry a vase and pilaster ornamentation, while on the upper courses, there are small niches housing deities. Thus there are five principal deities in the lower course and nine deities in the upper course on each side. Since the mukhamandapa abuts the eastern wall, only one niche is retained in the lower course. On either side of the eastern wall, the upper course retains the principal niche at the corners and smaller niches at the recessed walls.

The sculptures in the lower courses, of the Sri Vimāna depict various aspects of Śiva and also the subsidiary deities who include Gaṇēsa, Viṣṇu, Subrahmanya, Durga, Brahma, and Bhairava, supplemented by Lakshmi, Saraswati, and Durga in the niches of the great mandapa. The sculptures were made separately and fitted into the niches. They are flanked by a group of small sculptures, carved in situ, illustrating the theme the niche sculpture seeks to represent. The sculptures on the upper courses represent, besides some aspects of Śiva, the guardian deities of the eight quarters.

The roof cornice consists mainly of three parts: (a) the frieze of dwarfs at the bottom, (b) the cornice forming the outer edge of the ceiling roof proper and, (c) the frieze of leogriffs on the top. The cornice is decorated with plain spade-like ornamentation topped by the head of a leogriff.

A row of miniature shrines runs around the tower like a garland, and is called a hāra. It consists of square pavilions at the corners, rectangular pavilions in the middle, with a nest (nida) ornamentation in between.

Above this rise the main tower, consisting of nine stories including the ground floor. The upper stories of the main tower carry the same type of ornamentation, consisting of square and oblong pavilions except a change; the central wagon-shaped pavilion is flanked by square ones instead of "the nests", the whole being projected forward than the rest. This is a change from the Tañjāvūr tower, which presents a pyramidal appearance without the central projection.

The neck is provided with four niches in the cardinal directions and bulls at the corners. The niches are topped by arch-like embellishment called kirtimukhas.

The globular element on the top called Sikhara is according to tradition, made of one stone weighing many tonnes. But, in fact, it is made of many pieces of cut stones dressed for the purpose, as may be seen from the portion where the plaster has fallen down.

The finial, stūpi is a metal vase with a lotus-bud design at the top. It is gilded with gold and is said to carry an inscription named after Nallakkā-tōḷa-uḍayār, a Poligar of Uḍayārpālaiyam. It is not known whether the stūpi is the original one and probably gilded by the Poligar or is a new one gifted by him.

The sanctum enshrining the main deity, is encased by an inner wall. Between the inner wall and the outer, there is an intervening passage-called sāndhāra running all around. The two walls are joined at the top by a series of corbelling. They are provided to support the massive superstructure. In the great temple of Tañjāvūr, the outer walls have openings in the centre leading into the intervening passage. Facing the openings are sculptures of deities. The inner faces of the passage are painted with scenes depicting exploits of Śiva and his devotees. But in the temple of Gangaikōṇḍachōḷapuram, no painting is noticed in the inner passage. The central openings and corresponding sculptures, are also not found here. This inner passage around the sanctum is also found on the first floor. In the Tañjāvūr temple the inner wall of this passage carries 108 poses of dancing Śiva, of which 83 are fully finished and the rest are incomplete. But in Gangaikōṇḍachōḷapuram no such sculptural representation is noticed.

The inner sanctum, houses a very big Śiva Līnga, rising to a height of thirteen feet. It is said to be the biggest Śiva Līnga enshrined in a sanctum in any South Indian temple. The entrance to the sanctum is guarded by massive doorkeepers, dvārapālas.

The maṇḍapa immediately preceeding the sanctum is approached by steps leading to it from the north and the south sides and also from the great maṇḍapa in the east. The entrances are guarded by big dvārapālas of remarkable beauty. The maṇḍapa is supported by massive plain and square pillars. The eastern walls flanking the opening to the great mandapa carry groups of small sculptures illustrating Śaivite themes. The following are the themes thus represented.

The episode of Rāvaṇa travelling in his chariot; shaking the Kailāsa mountain; Śiva seated with Umā, pressing the mountain with his toe; Rāvaṇa's anguish under the weight of the mountain and finally Śiva bestowing boons on Rāvaṇa, are depicted in three panels

The second episode on the same wall depicts Viṣṇu, worshipping Śiva with 1008 lotus flowers; finding one short he plucks his own eye and offers it as a flower; Śiva bestows grace on Viṣṇu. The panels closer to the entrance depict the marriage of Śiva with Umā. Umā, the daughter Himavān, desirous of marrying Śiva, undertakes austerities and worships Śiva; Śiva, after testing her steadfastness as a beautiful youth, marries her; the celestials witness the marriage; Brahma, the creator offers oblation to the sacrificial fire and Viṣṇu gives Umā in marriage to Śiva.

The east wall close to the entrance on the northern side depicts the Kirātārjuna scene; Arjuna the Pāṇḍava hero performs austerities to obtain a Pāśupata weapon; Śiva as a hunter accompanied by Umā as a huntress, tests Arjuna's devotion; picks up a quarrel with Arjuna over a kill; Arjuna not knowing the personality behind the hunter, enters into a duel with him and is ultimately vanquished; Śiva manifesting himself bestows the weapon.

At the extreme north of the same side are portrayed two episodes, one representing Śiva quelling the pride of God of death, in order to protect his devotee and the other representing Saint Chaṇḍikēśwara a great devotee of Śiva, cutting off the leg of his father, who disturbed his faith and Śiva bestowing grace on both father and son.

Though these group sculptures are carefully selected, they are imperfectly finished and lack the beauty and elegance of the sculptures of the main tower.

The Mahāmaṇḍapa

Had the original mahāmaṇḍapa been preserved, it would have retained the grandeur of its conception and beauty. But as it is, only the portion upto the main base is original. The side walls, the pillars and the ceilings have been reconstructed, probably in the 18th century A. D. Obviously the superstructure should have crumbled due to neglect and vegetation. However a part of the original has survived upto the ceiling at the western end. From the surviving portion it may be seen, the roof (prastara) of the mahāmaṇḍapa was in level with the prastara of the ground floor (ādi bhūmi) of the main Vimāna. Like the walls of the main Vimāna, a horizontal cornice divides the outer walls of the mahāmaṇḍapa into two parts. They carry a series of niches both in the upper and lower courses. The sculptures of Vidyāśvaras, Vasus, Ādityas and other subsidiary deities were probably enshrined in them. As mentioned earlier, the ādibhūmi of the main Vimāna has two floors inside the sāndhāra passage, the intervening cornice forming the intermediate floor level. The mahāmaṇḍapa should have been a two storeyed pavilion, quite fitting with the mahāprāsāda of the temple. In view of the tall dvārapālas guarding the entrance to the mukhamāṇḍapa, the central passage should have had only the upper ceiling without the intermediate flooring. Thus the central passage was flanked by two storeyed structures, resembling the storeyed cloister of the enclosure. It is likely that the mahāmaṇḍapa of Tañjāvūr was also originally a two storeyed structure. They would have presented a most spectacular sight when the deities were taken out in procession through the mahāmaṇḍapa.

As it stands today the inner side of the maṇḍapa has a central passage, leading from the front to the sanctum flanked by two raised platforms and a passage running around. Two massive dvārapālas are noticed at the western end guarding the entrance to the mukhamāṇḍapa. A room at the south western corner houses a beautiful Sōmāśkānda image and a few other bronzes. A few sculptures and bronzes receiving regular worship are on the northern platform. The north eastern corner houses an interesting Solar altar, now worshipped as navaḡraha (nine planets).

The front entrance to the great maṇḍapa, is again approached by steps from north and south. The entrance to the maṇḍapa is guarded by massive dvārapālas. As the flooring of the maṇḍapa is on a high elevation, the steps rise to a considerable height forming a high platform in the front. It is said that there is a sub-terranean passage with steps under this platform. Some claim that this passage leads to the royal palace, while others assert that it leads to the river Kolliḍam. Yet a third tradition says that it leads to an underground treasury wherein invaluable properties belonging to the temple are preserved. None in the living memory has set foot on this passage for fear of darkness, poisonous gas and wasps.

It is not unlikely that the empty underground space below the great maṇḍapa and the space between the steps, were utilised as store houses.

The original steps leading to the front entrance of the great maṇḍapa and the raised platform were probably disturbed and rebuilt as some of the stones built-in haphazardly carry fragmentary inscriptions of the 13th Century A. D.

(B) Sculpture

The sculptures of Gangaikondachōḷeśwaram are known for their boldness of conception and excellent execution. They present pleasing and charming faces full of life and rhythm. The images of Saraswathi, Chaṇḍeśānugrahamūrthi and Naṭarāja are undoubtedly from the dextrous hands of a master craftsman who has carved a permanent place for his creations in the art history of Tamilnad.

The sculptures on the main Vimāna, the great maṇḍapa, and the other small shrines represent the forms prevalent at that period and occupy fixed positions to suit the needs of worship, as enunciated in the Āgamic texts. The images in the northern and southern Kailāsa shrines occupy identical positions. The main temple, being a mahāprāsāda, introduces additional images in its niches. An image of either Lingōdhabhava or Viṣṇu is placed generally in the niche at the back of the Garbhagrha in Śiva temples. In the great Vimāna of Gangaikondachōḷapuram both are found at the back. Viṣṇu with his consorts is seen in the lower niche while Lingōdhabhava is shown in the upper niche. In some of the temples of the Chōḷa period, Subrahmaṇya is shown here at the back niche, especially when the temple faces west. An image of Subrahmaṇya is also shown here at the back of the Garbhagrha. The image of Chaṇḍeśānugrahamūrti occupying the north eastern niche is also significant. In Pallava temples like Airāvatēśvara, Mukteśvara and Mātangēśvara, all at Kāñchi, Chaṇḍeśānugrahamūrti figures are noticed occupying an identical position.

The upper row of niches in the main Vimāna carry sculptures of dikpālas and eleven Rudras, besides a few well-known forms of Śiva. Of the eight dikpālas the one occupying the northern quarter is clearly Sōma, identified by the halo behind his head. Sōma facing north is found on the third floor of the monolith, Dharmarāja ratha at Māmallapuram. He is also found in the north on the enclosure wall of the Kailāsanātha temple of Kāñchi. Sōma distinguished by a halo behind his head, is always shown as the guardian deity of the north in Tamilnad, unlike in the north where Kubhera is represented on the Vimāna, though both are held identical in architectural treatises.

It may be seen that besides the images identified, there are eleven images with four arms in a standing posture. The dikpālas are secondary deities called āvaraṇa dēvatas, receiving daily worship. Besides the dikpālas the eleven Rudras (Ēkādaśa Rudras), the twelve Ādityās, the eight Vasus, the eight Vidyēśvaras, the eight mūrthis (asṭamūrthis) and some other deities are also daily worshipped. According to Āgamic texts the eleven Rudras should be shown standing with four arms, holding paraśu and mṛga in the upper arms, while the lower ones should be in the abhaya and varada poses. Evidently the eleven images on the Vimāna at Gangaikōṇḍachōḷapuram represent the eleven Rudras. The names of the eleven Rudras as given in texts are Sadyōjāta, Vāmadēva, Aghōra, Tatpuruṣa, Īśāna, Mṛtyunjaya, Vijaya, Kiranākṣa, Aghōrāstra, Srikaṇṭha and Mahādēva.

The great maṇḍapas at Tañjāvūr and Gangaikōṇḍachōḷapuram carry a number of niches adorned with sculptures. In the Kailāsanātha temple of Kāñchi images of Lakshmi, Saraswathi, Durga and Jyēṣṭha are found in the maṇḍapa. According to Mayamatha, the well-known South-Indian text on architecture, these four forms of Goddesses are to be placed outside the Brahmaṣṭhāna, the place occupied by the main Vimāna. In Tañjāvūr and Gangaikōṇḍachōḷapuram Lakshmi, Saraswathi and Durga are found in identical niches on the walls of the great pavilion. Evidently they are enshrined in these niches to fulfil ritual needs. Some of the sculptures in standing posture found on the mahāmaṇḍapa have not so far been identified. It is likely they also represent the secondary deities. A series of sculptures at Tañjāvūr are shown with two arms, holding a sword and a shield. They are probably the eight Vasus, described in Āgamic texts. Unfortunately the great maṇḍapa at the Gangaikōṇḍachōḷapuram has fallen down and undergone repairs. The majority of the niches are disturbed and are no more in existence. Some of the loose sculptures preserved in the enclosure may belong to this group.

The representation of the guardian deities on the Vimāna, the sculpture placement in the niches of the Vimāna and the presence of Saraswathi, Lakshmi and Durga in the niches of the mahāmaṇḍapa show that the builders had architectural treatises before them.

The following is the sculpture placement in the lower niches of the main Vimāna.

EAST-WALL (SOUTH SIDE)

KANKĀLADHARA :- Six armed standing figure in tribhanga pose. The upper right arm holds a snake; the middle one feeds the mṛga and the lower one playing on uḍukkai is broken. The upper left arm holds a trident across the back with a chowri hanging; the middle one is placed on the head of a dwarf standing by the side and the bottom holding the uḍukkai is broken. Pair of sandals adorn the feet. The plaster and painting on the figure belong to a later period.

No sculpture is represented on the side walls. The middle of the makara toraṇa carries wavy lines. This figure of Ardhanaṛi is particularly charming with a captivating smile on its face. The artist has been able to bring forth masculine firmness and feminine tenderness in the same face.

DAKSHINĀMŪRTI :- The original figure of Dakṣiṇāmūrti that should have adorned this niche seems to have been lost. The present one is a late figure that could be assigned 13th Century A. D. It is disproportionate to the niche and is dwarfish. It is similar to the sculptures of the period seated on a mountain with four arms. The upper right arm holds a rosary of beads. The lower right is in a teaching posture; the upper left holds fire and the lower, a book. The right leg is planted on the back of a lying dwarf; the left is bent and placed on the right knee. One of the image of sage, wearing kuṇḍala ear ornaments seems to be original. The side walls have four rows of miniature sculptures. East-wall :- two sages and two gaṇas; five women in second row; six gaṇas in third row and four sages in the fourth row. West wall :- first row, Agastya, two dēvas and Sūrya; second row, dēvas; third row devas and sages; and two devotees in the fourth row.

Side walls carry Sūrya and Chandra at the top. On one side there are devotees and on another is shown Mārkaṇḍēya, the boy-saint worshipping Linga and the God of death dragging him forcibly with a rope.

KĀMĀNTAKA :- Four armed seated figure; right upper arm holding a rosary of beads and the lower arm pointing down. The left upper arm holds a chowri and the lower is placed on thigh. The head dress is delightfully treated and has a distinctiveness of its own.

EAST-WALL (NORTH SIDE)

CHAṆḌĒSĀNUGRAHAMŪRTI : Śiva seated on a throne with four arms carries axe and antelope in his upper arms; with the lower the Lord is seen crowning Chaṇḍēsa with a garland of flowers, a symbol of affection and stewardship. Chaṇḍēsa is seen seated in front and with folded arms receiving the pride of place bestowed on him by his Lord. Chaṇḍēsa is the embodiment of devotion and piety and the place he attained is considered the highest, a devotee of Śiva is privileged with. It is called the Chaṇḍēsa padam, the abode of deliverance. According to Śaiva Siddhānta Śiva bestows this grace, in the company of Śakti, His consort. In the sculpture under reference, Pārvati or Umā Paramēśwari as she is often described, is seated by the side of Her Lord. The treatment of ornaments, the portrayal of limbs and affection with which Śiva is seen taking the garland around the head of Chaṇḍēsa are suggestive and truly convey the supreme message of Śaiva Siddhānta, the image seeks to depict. In the figure of Chaṇḍēsa, Rājendra Chōla has carved his own image. Sri C. Sivaramamurti in his work 'the Chōla temples' states that "The most remarkable carving here, the Chaṇḍēsānugrahamūrti panel, is almost a suggestion of the laurels won by Rājendra through the grace of Śiva and he humbly presents himself as a devotee of Lord, who blessed Chaṇḍēsa".

On the side walls is shown the story of Chaṇḍēsa; Chaṇḍēsa worshipping Śiva as a Līṅga; the cows standing by the side; his father watching the happenings hiding himself behind the branches of a tree; disturbing Chaṇḍēsa's worship; perturbed Chaṇḍēsa throwing his axe at his father and Śiva bestowing grace on both.

LAKSHMI : Correspondingly on the South side of the mahāmaṇḍapa, in the west wall is an image of Goddess Lakshmi, seated on a lotus throne with two arms. The Dēvi holds lotus flowers in her arms; unlike Sarasvati, she is seen wearing a breast-band. Above her are shown two elephants pouring water from golden pots held in their trunks.

DVĀRAPĀLAS (GATE KEEPERS)

There are altogether six pairs of massive, monolithic dvārapālas guarding the various entrances to the main temple, of which four pairs are found in the east. The first pair guard the entrance tower at the east. They are now fallen down and lie upside down. The second pair is to be seen at the eastern entrance to the mahāmaṇḍapa. The entrance from the mahāmaṇḍapa to the mukhamāṇḍapa is guarded by a third pair while the fourth guard the entrance to the sanctum. The side entrances to the mukhamāṇḍapa from the south and the north are also guarded by dvārapālas of exquisite workmanship. These dvārapālas are a class by themselves. The Āgamic texts mention four pairs of dvārapālas, each to guard a cardinal direction. Their names are given as under. East :- Nandi and Mahākāla; South :- Hērambha and Bhṛīngi; West :- Durmukha and Pāṇḍura and North :- Sita and Asita. The Vimāna of the Tañjāvūr temple has four pairs of dvārapālas each guarding a direction. Evidently they represent the images named above. In the temple of Gangaikōṇḍachōḷapuram the Vimāna does not carry dvārapālas except in the east. The dvārapālas guarding the entrances to the garbhagṛha are certainly Nandi and Mahākāla. In all likelihood the dvārapālas guarding the south and north entrances to the Mukhamāṇḍapa are Hērambha and Bhṛīngī, Durmukha and Pāṇḍura respectively.

THE SOLAR ALTAR

The solar altar called Saura pīṭha in Āgamic texts is in the form of a full blown lotus on a square pedestal in two tiers. The upper tier carries eight deities portrayed at eight directions. They are considered the eight planets, which, including the central lotus representing Sūrya (sun) constitute the navagrahas, (nine planets) worshipped by the Hindus for the bestowal of good fortune and the removal of obstacles. The lower tier is modelled as a charriot with wheels on either side, drawn by seven horses. Aruṇa the Charioteer of Sūrya is shown driving the horses. The seven horses are said to represent the seven days of the week. The wheels are ornamented with twelve petals, representing the twelve months of a year. At the corners are seen flying celestials, gandharvas carrying flower garlands.

The Āgamic texts specify the worship of Sūrya in the form of a lotus altar. Evidently this is a representation of Saura pīṭha, solar altar, intended for daily worship. This elegant piece is also decidedly a Chālukyan sculpture, probably brought here as a war trophy. In recent years, it has assumed great significance as a large number of devotees worship it as Navagraha for the fulfilment of their vows. When the planet Saturn changes its position once in 27 months, nearly a million people offer worship to this altar.

OTHER SCULPTURES: Besides the sculptures found on the walls of the shrines, a few loose sculptures are also found in the temple. A few of them have been collected and embedded on a platform by the side of the northern entrance. The following sculptures are found embedded: Bhikṣhātṭa, Līṅgodbhava, Gaṇeśa, Subrahmaṇya, Dēvī, Virabhadra, Brahma, Durga, Chāṇḍrasēkhara, Vṛshabhāntika, Vinādhara, Sūrya, Sage, Dvārapāla, three figures of Nāgarāja, two images of Vinādhara and four figures probably representing secondary deities. On the south enclosure wall, near the southern Kailāsa, are found embedded a four armed standing Ardhanārī, a Gajalakshmi and two images of Sūrya. By the side of the Lion-well, is found an image of Viṣṇu with Śrīdēvī standing. By the side of the Sōlar pīṭha, in the mahāmāṇḍapa there are, an image of eight armed Durga and a Sūrya. These two images are in Chālukyan style and probably were brought as trophies. Sri C. Sivaramamurti in 'the Chōḷa temple' states that the Nandi in the temple of Goddess is Chālukyan in style.

(C) Bronzes

There are a few bronzes of remarkable beauty preserved in the temple. They were probably gifted for worship when the temple was erected. Of the classical bronzes in the collection, Sōmāskanda, Subrahmaṇya, Durga, Bhōgasakti, Adhikāranandi and probably Vṛshabhāntika are to be assigned to the period of Rājendra I.

BHOGASAKTI : A two armed standing image of Pārvati of arresting beauty is now placed near the sanctum.

DURGA : Four armed standing figure in erect (samabhanga) pose; holds discus and conch in the upper arms and boon-bestowing and hand-on-thigh poses in the lower arms. The Goddess is shown wearing a breast-band; buffalo head is not represented below the feet. Appropriate with its role the figure displays firmness with which the Goddess struck the demon. The conch and discus are supported by metal pieces issuing from the back.

ADHIKĀRANANDI : Four armed figure in abhaya pose, standing on a lotus pedestal. The upper pair of arms hold axe and antelope; the lower arms in anjali pose hold a garland of flower in between. This image is particularly a good specimen representing the theme.

SŌMĀSKANDA : Quite fitting with the great Linga in the sanctum and the mahāprāsāda of the temple, the group of Sōmāskanda in the temple is fairly big in size and exhibits all the classical qualities of the Chōḷa age. The group consists of Śiva seated majestically on a pedestal with four arms. A two armed Dēvi is shown by the side. The original Skanda image is missing. The figures of Śiva and Dēvi closely resemble the sculptures on the lower niches of the main vimāna. The group could be assigned to the period of Rājendra I and was probably the principal Sōmāskanda image of the temple. It may be mentioned that the bronze image of Sōmāskanda is the main processional deity, representing the Linga in the sanctum. The Sōmāskanda image of Thiruvārūr is called Vīdi Viṭaṅkar and the one at Tañjāvūr was called Dakṣiṇamēru Viṭaṅkar. The Vimāna of Tañjāvūr temple was called Dakṣiṇamēru by its builder Rājarāja I. The group of Sōmāskanda in the Gangaikoṇḍachōḷapuram temple should have been the main processional deity of the temple. This is the biggest group of Sōmāskanda image of the imperial Chōḷa period now known to exist.

SUBRAHMANYA : By far the best bronze in the collection of the temple is the Subrahmanya image variously called Kārthikēya, Dēvasēnāpathi and Muruga. The image about 3½' in height is shown with four arms standing on a lotus seat. Unlike the conventional lotus pedestals seen in most of the bronze images, the present one is realistically treated. The protrusion at the bottom was probably to slide the image into a bigger pedestal which is now missing. The right upper arm holds sakti, the top of which is broken; the lower right holds a sword of which only the handle now remains, the blade is lost; the left upper arm holds a cock and the lower left holds a shield. The figure is elegantly proportioned and delightfully adorned with ornaments. The vigorous poise and the charming smiling face are suggestive of youth and beauty. Subrahmanya as Muruga is adored as the embodiment of youth, beauty and knowledge. Muruga is the darling of the Tamil country. His exploits are celebrated in Tamil literature; Subrahmanya is a War God, Dēvasēnāpathi the greatest commander-in-chief of the celestials. Rājendra I was the greatest commander, the Tamil country ever saw. It is of interest to note that this great hero has chosen Subrahmanya as his favourite deity. The sword, sakti, and the shield in the hands of the image symbolise Subrahmanya's martial quality while the cock stands for the final victory.

VRSHAVĀHANA : Four armed image of Śiva standing cross legged. The lower right arm is bent and placed on the head of a bull which is missing. The tall head dress, a Jaṭāmakuṭa is somewhat disproportionate.

Minor Shrines

DURGA SHRINES : Images of Durga are enshrined in four cardinal directions of the palace. Tradition says that these images guarded the four gates of the fortified city. These are now at Palliṇḍai in the north, at Meykāvalputhur in the east, and on Vīrareddi street in the south. The fourth in the west was originally near the bund of the great lake but has recently been brought nearer to the palace and enshrined.

KANAKKUPILLAIYĀR : A few furlongs to the south west of the big temple is a small shrine, enshrining a seated Gaṇeśa of considerable beauty. It is four armed, holding the little axe, rosary of beads, a broken tusk, and a mātulinga fruit. Around the waist is seen a serpent belt. This image also seems to be Chālukyan in origin.

KURUVĀLAPPAR TEMPLE : The Viṣṇu temple about a mile to the west of the great temple is now called Kuruvālappar temple, believed to be a contraction of the term Kurugai Kāvalappar. The temple is intimately associated with the lives of two Vaishnavite saints, Nāthamuni and his grand-son Ālavandār. Nāthamuni spent his last days here. Ālavandār on hearing that Nāthamuni was on his death bed, hurried to this place; but before he could reach, the great Acharya passed away. Sri Ālavandār erected a temple in the place where the Acharya attained salvation.

According to tradition the present temple was the one built by Ālavandār. The main deity called Vīranārāyaṇap Perumāl is in standing pose. The temple is preceded by a small entrance tower.

AIYANĀR TEMPLE : To the south east of the palace remains, is a small shrine of Aiyānār. The temple faces south and houses a beautiful image of Aiyānār and his consorts Pūrṇa and Pushkala. The sculpture of Aiyānār is an elegant image and closely resembles the sculptures on the main temple and decidedly a sculpture of Rājendra's period.

Epigraphs

Twelve inscriptions and a few fragments have been noticed so far on the temple. An inscription of Virarājendra Chōḷa, the third son of Rājendra-I is the earliest and lengthiest running to about 216 lines. It relates to gifts of lands in a number of villages in the Chōḷa empire, the proceeds from which were to be utilised for worship and maintenance of the temple. The accuracy with which the boundaries and measurements of the lands are recorded, the taxes from which the lands were exempted, the crops that were raised in the lands, the total quantity of grains to be measured out to the temple by each village, the names of the officers who drafted the endowment, the names of those who compared the drafting, the names of those who entered them in registers etc., recorded in detail in this epigraph, show the efficiency and thoroughness of Chōḷa administration.

These gifts were ordered by Virarājendra while he was in the royal palace at Kāñchīpuram in his fifth regnal year. Though this is a single record, it relates to more than six orders of the king. The epigraph records that the order would take effect from the regnal years of Rājendra-I and Rājādhirāja-I. The earliest regnal year of Rājendra from which an order was to take effect, is mentioned as the 23rd. Evidently the temple was completed and consecrated before that (1035 A. D.). It is likely that Rājendra, the builder of the temple, himself made these gifts. Probably they had not been recorded and Virarājendra ordered them to be entered in the proper registers. There are two orders, that took effect from the 26th and 30th years respectively of Rājādhirāja I, the son and successor of Rājendra. Evidently, some gifts were made in the reign of Rājādhirāja as well. From the records it is seen that more than one hundred and ten thousand bags of paddy were to be measured out to the temple every year by the villages mentioned in epigraphs.

A careful study of the inscription reveals that most of the lands and proceeds recorded in this inscriptions are also recorded in the Tañjāvūr inscriptions of Rājarāja as gifts to the great temple of Tañjāvūr.

It is strange that most of the lands gifted to Tañjāvūr temple by Rājārāja should have been transferred to the temple of Gangaikondachōḷapuram by his son within twenty five years of the original gift.

The inscription is of great value. It mentions the names of the various divisions and sub-divisions of the Chōḷa empire. It also gives a long list of officers who were in charge of the administration in the reign of Vīrarājendra. A certain Pallavaraiyan is mentioned as the Thirumandira Ōlai (royal secretary) of Vīrarājendra. He received orders verbally from the king and drafted them. The orders were scrutinised and approved by three senior secretaries (Thirumandira Ōlaināyakam) whose names are recorded as Vānādhirājan, Madhurāntaka Brāhmādhirājan and Pallavarayan. Sixty four other officers are also named; their names are given at the end of this chapter.

The inscription is of interest from another angle. In listing the villages gifted it gives the names of various temples, tanks, colonies, irrigation channels; cremation grounds etc., in each village, thus furnishing details for a study of the contemporary history of these villages. These details are published at the end of this chapter.

The name of the temple according to this inscription is Gangaikonda Chōḷisvaram. Rājendra is referred to as the father, the victor of Pūrvadēsa, Gangai and Kaḍāram (Pūrvadesamum Gangaiyum, Kaḍāramum Koṇḍaruḷina Ayyar). Rājādhirāja is referred to as the elder brother, the victor of Kalyāṇapura and Kollāpura who laid down his life while seated on an elephant (கல்யாணபுரமும் கொல்லாபுரமும் கொண்டு ஆகிய மேல் துருவிய அண்ணல்). The inscription also details the victories gained by Vīrarājendra.

Another inscription of interest is a fragment found on the front steps of the great maṇḍapa. It mentions Vānavanmahādēvi and Amman-gādēvi. Vānavanmahādēvi was the name of Rājendra's mother (Rājārāja's wife). One of Rājendra's queens was also named Vānavanmahādēvi. It is not known who is referred to in this inscription; but in all likelihood it refers to Rājendra's queen. Amman-gādēvi, the other, was one of the daughters of Rājendra-I. She was given in marriage to the Eastern Chāḷukya ruler Rājārāja Narēndra. Their son was the celebrated Kulottunga-I.

The next king represented in the inscription is Kulōttunga I (1070-1120). A record of his dated in 49th regnal year does not pertain to this temple but relates to the gift of a village Sungam thavirtha Chōḷanallūr, as a dēvatāna gift, for provisions etc., to the temple of Rājendra Chōḷisvara in Pottālimaḍa. Probably this temple was built in the reign of Rājendra I and was named after him. The inscription states that worship in the temple was stopped as sufficient provisions were not available. Kulōttunga made the gift tax free and arranged for regular worship. A certain ascetic Āryadēvan is mentioned in this inscription. The epigraph also records that the order of the king was issued when he was seated on a throne, at the eastern porch in the ground floor of Gangaikoṇḍachōḷa māligai in Gangaikoṇḍachōḷapuram.

The last Chōḷa king represented in inscriptions is Kulōttunga III. His inscriptions are in fragments and found by the side of the steps to the eastern entrance to the great maṇḍapa. They record the victories gained by Kulōttunga and the erection of a victory pillar. From the fragmentary nature of these inscriptions it may be surmised that a number of other Chōḷa inscriptions of the temple have been lost. Reference has been made to the presence of an incomplete inscription of a Gāhadawāla king, probably of Madanapāla.

The earliest Pāṇḍya king to be represented here is Jaṭāvarman Sundara Pāṇḍya, identical with the ruler who uprooted the Chōḷa empire. He ascended the throne in 1251. The sole inscription of his found in this temple is dated in his second regnal year. Evidently the gift was made when the Pāṇḍya emperor captured Gangaikoṇḍachōḷapuram and paid a visit to the temple. He established a special worship called Sundara Pāṇḍyan sandhi, after his name to be performed daily. For this purpose Sundara gifted lands etc, in Gangaikoṇḍachōḷapuram. The inscription mentions a number of places, in Gangaikoṇḍachōḷapuram like the gateway lane, Suddhamali lane, Rājendra Chōḷa fort wall and Vēmbuguḍi gate.

Gangaikoṇḍachōḷapuram is said to lie in Ponparappiṇṇu of Maṇṇaikoṇḍa Chōḷa vaḷanāḍu, a subdivision in Vaḍakarai Vikrama Chōḷa vaḷanāḍu.

The next Pāṇḍya to be represented is Vikrama who ably assisted his brother Sundara. His record is dated in his sixth year (1157). Vikrama like his brother established a special worship in the temple after his own name as Rājākkalnāyakan sandhi for which he gifted twenty velis of land. The epigraph names two villages Kulōttungachōḷanallūr, and Rājendraachōḷanallūr. It also mentions the boundaries of lands gifted. The river Madhurāntaka. Vaḍavāru and irrigation channels called Ānaiveṭṭuvān kāl and Adigai Nāyakan vāykāl. A highway called the Rājendra Chōḷan highway is also referred to in this inscription.

Two inscriptions of Pāṇḍya Māravarman Kulasekhara who ascended the throne in 1268 A. D. are found engraved on the temple. The first one dated in his fourth year, records the purchase of lands in Devaniputtūr belonging to a certain Kumārmangalam Udayān, Sivataṇḍan. The other inscription which is incomplete, is dated in Kulasekhara's fifth regnal year. It records the sale of lands belonging to a number of individuals to the temples of Gangaikondachōḷisvarm. The epigraph mentions highways named the Kulōttunga Chōḷan fort wall highway; the Viḷangu-ḍaiyān highway and a highway through which a short elephant passed.

Two inscriptions of a chieftain, Thiruvāṅgaḍamudaiyān Ekāmra-nātha Gāṅgeyan of Vaippur, who was in control of this area are recorded in this temple. One of the inscriptions gives the Saka date 1385 (1463 A.D.). From the inscription it may be seen that this chieftain probably erected a maṇḍapa named after himself, Ekāmranāthan Maṇḍapa. While the chieftain was seated in a maṭha of Ekāmranātha Maṇḍapa the Mudalis, the temple priests, the tānattārs (those who looked after the properties of the temple), the Parikarathār (temple attendants) and a certain Kasmīrarāja (probably a person from Kashmir) assembled before him. The chieftain bestowed the right (probably on Kasmīrarāja) of duties-over Thirumāḷigaikūru (maintenance of the enclosure and the right to enjoy proceeds apportioned for the purpose) for fifteen days in a month and lordship over the maṭha for the other fifteen days of the month. For this purpose he gifted two house sites in the northern row and two in the southern row of Rājendra Chōḷa street. A certain Kūhūruḍaiyān is mentioned as the temple accountant. The other inscription of the chieftain relates to a similar gift. Mention has been made of the inscriptions of Vijayanagara rulers in the temple.

Note A

The quantity of paddy measured or gold paid per annum as due to the temple by various villages mentioned in Virarājendra's inscription are given below. As the inscription is damaged at some places, either the name of the village or the quantity measured is lost in certain cases. The total quantity of paddy measured amounted to 1,03,893 kalams (bags) per annum. As there are many gaps in the inscriptions, the total measurement should have been many thousand kalams more of paddy. The maximum measure received from a single village is 20,585 kalams. Unfortunately the name of the village is lost. Vayalur is the next village to measure 16,900 kalams. Evidently these villages should have been the most fertile villages during the Chōla period.

Literature

A number of literary works in both Tamil and Sanskrit, refer to Gangaikondachōḷapuram and its temple.

THIRUVISAIPPĀ : The sacred hymns (Thiruvisaippā) composed on the presiding deity of Gangaikondachōḷīśvaram by Karuvūrdēvar, is the earliest work to refer to this great temple. Karuvūrdēvar, a Brahmin by birth, hailed from Karuvūr the modern Karūr in Trichy District. He was a great devotee of Śiva and is believed to be a Siddha. He has composed devotional hymns on ten temples among which are included the Rājarājēśvara temple of Tañjāvūr and the temple of Gangaikondachōḷapuram. Karuvūrdēvar was a contemporary of Rājarāja I and his son Rājendra I, the builder of Gangaikondachōḷīśvaram. Thiru-Isaippā is a particular type of poetic composition in Tamil. The ten hymns of Karuvūrdēvar and similar hymns of a few other Saivite saints have been included in the ninth book (Thirumurai) of the Saiva canon. Karuvūrdēvar's address to the deity of Gangaikondachōḷīśvaram, is soul-stirring poetry that ought to be read in its original. 'People in large numbers from far and near throng to the temple of Gangaikondachōḷīśvara adoring the deity with folded arms' says Karuvūrdēvar. Śiva as Gangādhara also comes in for special praise.

VIKRAMĀNKADĒVACHARITA : The historical work, Vikramānkadēvacharita in Sanskrit on Chālukya Vikramāditya, by Bilhana throws valuable light on the relationship between the Chālukyas of Kalyān and the Chōḷas and incidentally refers to Gangaikondachōḷapuram. Bilhana, the poet, was born of a Brahmin family and hailed from Kashmir. He was born and brought up in Khonamushagrāma in jayavana-highland of Kashmir. His father was Jyeshṭhakalasa and mother Nāgādēvi. Bilhana attained distinction in Vedic learning, Sanskrit poetry (Kāvya) and Patanjali's mahābhāṣya (grammar). He left Kashmir in pursuit of fortunes and went to Mathura, Brindhāvana, and Kāśī. From there he went to Dhāra the capital of Bhōja, but before he could reach Dhāra, Bhōja the great patron of Sanskrit learning passed away. Disappointed Bilhana went to Gūrjaradēśa, where he could meet only envious poets. Bilhana left Gūrjara and went on a pilgrimage to Rāmēśvara in the south and on his way back was fortunate enough to visit the Chālukya capital. Vikramāditya the Chālukya contemporary of Vīrarājendra Chōḷa and Kulōttuṅga immediately appointed Bilhana as his court poet (Vidyāpathi). Vikramāṅkadēva Charita, describes the exploits of Vikramāditya in eighteen chapters. It is needless to go into the details of the work. According to the work, Vīrarājendra Chōḷa, the third son of Rājendra I, gave his daughter in marriage to Vikramāditya after effecting a truce with him. Possibly the marriage took place on the banks of Tungabhadra. Vīrarājendra returned to his capital and soon after passed away. This plunged the Chōḷa country into chaos. Having decided to place Vīrarājendra's son, Adhirājendra on the Chōḷa throne, Vikrama swiftly marched to Kānchi and spent some days there subduing some opponents. From there he turned his eyes on Gangākuṇḍa (Gangaikōṇḍacholapuram) which abounded in wealth and learned men. The city was beautiful with lofty towers and resembled the veritable abode of Lakshmi, the Goddess of Wealth. It truly resembled Amarāvati the capital of the celestials. Vikramāditya crowned Adhirājendra, the Chōḷa prince after defeating the enemies. He spent about a month there and returned to the banks of Tungabhadra, after subduing the forest archers (probably the Vēṭṭavars). But within a few days, the Chōḷa prince was killed by his opposing subjects (Prakritivirōdhakata) and the seat was occupied by Rājiga, the Vēṅgi ruler (Rājendra Kulōttuṅga). The above account of Bilhana gives the state of affairs at Gangāikōṇḍa-Chōḷapuram and the visit of Vikramāditya to that city. Scholars differ on the death of Adhirājendra. Sadasīva Pandarathar, who has written an excellent account of Chōḷa history in Tamil, points out an inscription of Adhirājendra wherein he is stated to be seriously ill. Pandarathar believes that Adhirājendra died due to illness and was not killed by his subjects. Probably Adhirājendra's weakness and the opposition he met from his generals, proved fatal to his life. Vikramāditya, wanted to punish the evil doers. But Kulōttuṅga who by that time was firmly in Chōḷa throne, fomented trouble, by instigating Vikrama's brother Sōmēśvara to attack him from behind. Though Vikrama was successful in defeating his brother and is credited with a success against Kānchi, he never set foot on Gangaikōṇḍachōḷapuram again. Kulōttuṅga was strong enough to foil his attempts and was ably assisted by the experienced Chōḷa Generals. Bilhana's Vikramāṅkadēvacharita is said to have been composed in 1085 A.D.

KALINGATTUPPARANI : The Kalingattupparani a most fascinating historical work in Tamil literature, was composed by Jayankondār, to celebrate the conquest of Kalinga by Kulōttuṅga I. Jayankondār adorned the court of Kulōttuṅga I as his court poet and composed the work, Kalingattupparani towards the end of Kulōttuṅga's reign. The work celebrates the exploits of Kulōttuṅga from his childhood and the greatness of his general Karuṇākara Tondaimān, who headed the victorious Chōḷa army on its Kalinga expedition. From Kalingattupparani, it may be seen that Kulōttuṅga was born and brought up at Gangaikondachōḷapuram. He was also made a crown prince at that city. The city is referred to as Gaṅgāpuri.

No detailed description of the city is however met with in the poem. Jayankondār, the poet hailed from Dīpanguḍi and was recognised as an eminent poet (Kavichanditan) by his contemporaries.

MŪVAR ULĀ : Ottakkūttar another eminent Tamil poet, adorned the courts of three successive Chōḷa emperors, Vikramachōḷa, Kulōttuṅga II and Rājarājā II. He has composed three quasi-historical works, (Ulās), one on each of the above rulers. These works, Vikramachōḷan Ulā, Kulōttuṅgachōḷan Ulā and Rājarājān Ulā, are popularly called Mūvar Ulā, and are known for their high literary accomplishments. Each poem gives a brief summary of the Chōḷa history beginning with the mythical ancestors and details the exploits of the hero. Gangaikonda Chōḷapuram is referred to by name in Kulōttuṅgachōḷan Ulā. The poet says that all the fourteen worlds were struck by the beauty and wealth of the capital.

The Rājarājachōḷan Ulā describes the palace, entrance towers, palacial buildings, streets, pavilions, (maṇḍapas), temples, chūḷigas, tōraṇas, beautiful windows, pials (terris), māḍas, dance halls etc., that adorned the capital.

References are not wanting in later literature which however are not of great interest to the present study.

Gaṅgaikondaḥṣṭāṇa Lake

The great lake, lying about two miles to the west of the temple and now called Ponnēri (golden lake) is of historic interest. It is intimately connected with the history of the capital. Its existence prior to the advent of Rājendra-I is not known. According to Thiruvālaṅkāḍu plates the lake was the liquid pillar of victory that Rājendra established to celebrate his conquest of Gangetic plains. If so, this is the biggest man made lake known to exist in this country. It is about sixteen miles in length and about three miles in breadth. At its extreme ends it has inlet and outlet channels that have gone out of use now. The lake itself has now been divided into two parts by a road running across, connecting Gaṅgaikondaḥṣṭāṇapuram with Jayāṅkondaḥṣṭāṇapuram in the west. The lake supplied water to the moat running around the old fortification.

Rājendra I, cherished the conquest of Gaṅgai as the greatest event in his life and rightly assumed the title Gaṅgaikondaḥṣṭāṇa. His capital was also named Gaṅgaikondaḥṣṭāṇapuram. According to Thiruvālaṅkāḍu plates, the generals who headed the Chōḷa army on its Gangetic expedition brought the holy water of Ganges in golden vessels carried on the heads of vanquished rulers. Rājendra himself went upto the banks of the Gōḍāvari river to receive his generals. The holy water was poured into the lake (a small part of it was also poured into the lion-well inside the temple) and the lake itself was named Chōḷaganga, a liquid pillar of victory.

Chalukya and Kalinga sculptures in Gangaikondacholapuram

Chalukyan sculptures :

Mention has been made earlier that a few sculptures of Chālukya origin are found in the village of Gaṅgaikondachōlapuram. The most outstanding piece is that of Sūryapīṭha, now worshipped as Navarṇha in the big temple. Images of Sūrya and Durga, also found by the side of Sūryapīṭha in the same temple, are from the Chālukyan area. Another image of Durga enshrined in the shrine of Durga to the north of the temple, (west of the Simha tīrtha) is also executed in the Chālukya style, but whether it actually comes from the Chālukya area is not known. An image of Gaṇēsa, now called Kapakkupillaiyār in a temple about three furlongs to the south-west of the great temple, is also Chālukyan in origin. Another Durga, enshrined in a temple in Veerareddi Street, is a fine specimen of Chālukyan art.

The presence of so many Chālukya sculptures at Gaṅgaikondachōlapuram need not surprise us, for the Chōlas were in perpetual war with the Chālukya's of Kalyān. Rājādhirāja I, the son and successor of Rājendra I, conquered Kalyān and brought as a war trophy an image of Dvārapāla from Kalyānapura. The image, now preserved in the Taṇjāvūr Art Gallery, bears an inscription on its pedestal, mentioning that it was a war trophy brought by Uḍaiyār Vijayarājendra from Kalyānapura. Obviously the Chālukya sculptures found in Gaṅgaikondachōlapuram were brought as war trophies by the successors of Rājendra I.

Kalinga sculptures in Gangaikondacholapuram :

Three beautiful images of Kalinga origin have been recently discovered at Gaṅgaikondachōlapuram by the Tamilnadu State Department of Archaeology. The sculptures are found lying in a mound called Kīlāichengamedu, about one mile east of the great temple. The nearby village is Meykāvalputtūr, the ancient body-guards' village. Mention has been made that a Durga image which is said to have guarded the eastern gate of the Palace, is at Meykāvalputtūr.

Bhairava :

Śiva as Bhairava is shown standing nude, with four arms, holding sūla and kadga in the right arms and damaru and kapāla in the left arms. A mundamāla is seen running upto his knees. The kinkini mēkhala, a band of small bells, adorns the waist. The Lord wears the jaṭāmakuta with a garland of skulls around the head. To the left of Śiva, is shown an emaciated, nude male figure with protruding eyes. To the right is shown a two armed emaciated female figure, holding a head in the left arm. The emblem on the right is obliterated.

Bhairava :

Another beautiful image of Śiva as Bhairava, with four arms; the upper part of the body only upto the waist is available. The upper right arm is broken; the lower right carries a kadga. The left arm holds damaru and kapāla. The kinkini mēkhala is noticed. The kapālamāla is also found.

Bhairavi :

Probably these Bhairava and Bhairavi images represent Yōgēśvara and Yōgini deities. Rājendra as a result of his Gangetic expedition, erected a temple of Yōgesvara and Yōgini at Kōlār and arranged for offering madhyamapāna. Rājendra's generals, who returned after their historic march to the Ganges through Kalinga, should have brought these valuable sculptures as war trophies and erected a temple in the capital. The sculptures may be assigned to 9th Century A.D.

Bhairavi :

Another image of Bhairavi, executed in granite, on the model of Kalinga image is of crude workmanship and is by a local artisan. Its presence shows the impact of Yōgini cult on the local population.
